in Virginia.

The position of this family naturally inclined them to a special interest in the New World. It was nearly related to Queen Elizabeth, the god-mother of Virginia, to Henry Carey, first Lord Hunsdon, to Raleigh, to the Sidneys, the Dudleys, and others who had been especially active in promoting American discoveries in the sixteenth century; and it was connected by marriage with Sir Francis Walsingham, the patron of American colonization by the English, and a leading reference, as was also Sir Francis Knollys, the elder, the grandfather of the West brothers who came to Virginia.

It will be interesting to note here an event which may have had some effect in turning the minds of many members of this family towards America.

The West ancestry.

I have been recently employed to trace back the ancestry of Colonel John West the first of Virginia as fully as possible, through male and lemale lines, and it seems to me that I should give the public an outline of the result of my research, not only because his family and connections were so instrumental in taking the first firm hold on this country for the English-speaking people, but also because the same blood which flowed in his veins still flows in the veins of thousands now living in Virginia and America.

I will confine myself mainly to the mere mention of lines, tamilies, and names, but the intelligent reader can easily supply the omitted items and sketches, as the characters which will be mentioned made their Miss Wills, of Fredericksburg, is visitng Miss Kate Fife.

THE PAMILY ALLIANCES

The descent can be traced through the carier branches of the following "families, which stand out the most prominent in the pages of history," but which are now "entombed in the nons and sepulchras of mortality": Beauchamp, Beautort, Bohin, De Vere, De Lacy, Fitzalian, Holland, La Warr, Mortimer, Mowbray, Percy, and Plantagenet.

And the following which "still endure in all their original grandeur" in the peerage of the British empire: Chiford, Courtenay, Butler, Howard, Nevili, West, and—"The Geraldines! 'its mil a

In brief, the descent of our first Lord-Governor and Captain-General, and of hundreds of the best funder in Virginia, can be traced through many of the granded old houses of the Henrys and the Edwards. And although the most of these great houses have ceased to exist in the peerage of old England, it must be a source of pride to know that much of the same blood still flows in the New World taroutsh many a great heart, giving nerve same blood still flows in the New World through many a great heart, giving nerve to the strong arm and nourishment to the vigorous brain.

"Where is Bohun?" exclaimed the celebrated Chief-Justice Randolph Crewe in his eloquent prologue to the Oxford pearage case, decided in 1825. "Where is Mowbray? Where is Mortimer? Nay, which is more and most of all, where is Flantagenet?"

It is a great mistake to attempt to ridi-cule this sentiment as being false pride. The continued existence and prosperity of every land must depend on the spirit and pride of country and of race, which is true patriotism. And it is our patriotic duty to pride of country and of race, which is true particitism. And it is our patricite duty to place our genesis on its true foundation and to honor our forefathers and our real founders as they so justify do erve.

The taking of the first firm hold on this country for the English-speaking people was the greatest work of one of the most remarkable transition periods in British history. It was probably the most momentous stroke of national policy in the annals of the world, and the task was necomplished by some of the greatest men or that brilliant period—men in every way as worthy as those who triampled at Hastings. Many of them had supported "the Red Cross" in our battle of Armageddon as bravely as the Normans did their "consecrated banner." The motives which inspired them were higher than those which inspired them were higher than those which inspired them were higher than those which inspired them of Kingland. The results of Normanly, and his barons in the conquest and settlement of England. The results of their task have been more far-reaching for the betterment of mankind than the results of Hastings. And we have in every way as much reason "to take pride in being able to connect ourselves ever so remotely with" our real founders as Englishmen have in tracing ourselves ever so remotely with " our real founders as Englishmen have in tracing from the roll of Battie Abbey. ALEXANDER BROWN,
